What is a Co-Contribution?

While the Australian Government subsidises the cost of your care under Support at Home, you may be asked to make a co-contribution towards the services you receive. The percentage you are required to pay is determined by your income and assets assessment completed by Services Australia.

This co-contribution:

- Helps cover part of the cost of your care, based on your financial situation
- Ensures the program is sustainable and fair
- Is means-tested to make sure it's affordable for everyone

How it works:

- If you are on a full pension, your contribution may be very low or even nil
- If you have more income or assets, you may be asked to contribute more
- The government sets a maximum annual and lifetime limit on how much you can be asked to contribute

Your specific co-contribution is calculated by the government after an income assessment, and we will always explain it clearly before you agree to any services.

Need Help Understanding Your Co-Contribution?

Our team can guide you through the process and help you plan your support around your budget and estimate your contributions.

We are here to make home care easier, more transparent, and fully personalised to you.
